STEVE MORRIS'S HARD HEAD. Two Bullets Well Flattened Out by the Skull. Anderson Christian, aged 67 years, and hephen Morris, considerable younger, both olored, live with their families in a house colored, live with their families in a house in White Hall alley, near Second and B streets northeast. The best of feeling has not prevailed between the men for some itme, although there was little occasion for any unpleasantness to arise. Christian is a hard working man, and apparently a well meaning one. Saturday last Mrs. Morris whipped one of her children in a way that Mrs. Christian thought unreasonable, and when her husband came home told him of it. Morris heard of what Mrs. Christian had said to her husband came home told him of it. Morris heard of what Mrs. Christian had said to her husband about the whipping and became very angry. When he reached home at midnight he went to Christian's room door and applied all manner of epithets to the old man. Christian resented the language as unbecoming, whereupen Morris strick at him and the latter warded off the blow. Morris retreated to the back room and making a threat blother. "How did you get that beauty?" asked a reporter of the REPUBLICAN. The young man looked out of his healthy eye and somewhat sadly said, "Before I left work vestering the boys had got a keg of beer, and I took five glasses of it, and on my way to the II street car I took a couple more beers. When I got on the ear it was crowded, and in trying to get up to the box to guit in my fare I struck a mair's foot, who had his leg cut in the middle of the car. I believe he is a driver ou the line. I didn't mean to strike his foot—to bil the truth, I didn't see his foot. At any rate, he got mad and hit me an awful crack on the nose. I guess I have a pretty eye. I may have said something to the man, but I have no real crack?"

whereupone Morits struck at lain and the latter warded off the blow. Morris retreated to the back room and making a threat that he would do something with the old man reached for, as Christian thought, an ax. Thinking that his life was is danger and that Morris intended to bit him with the ax. Christian shot twice at Morris and both bullets struck him in the head. Scalp wounds, the doctor called them after he had made a careful examination. One of the bullets was found to be flattened out as if struck by a forty ton steam hammer.

"He must have a fearful hard head," said a reporter of the Rupranteax to Christian vesterday afternoon, as the latter stood at his cell in the sixth precluct station house.

"Deed he has, sir," said Christian 'Last Sunday night when he came home he was so drunk that he fell down the steps and every body thought his neck was broken. I picked him up and put him in bed. Now you see what thanks I get for my kindness. I'se tited of the rows that have took place in that house every Sunday. I guess, inster, it will go hard with inc, but I have to defend myself."

The prisoner felt very much relieved in mind when he heard that Morris was not seriously hurt.
